SUBSCRIPTION FIFTY CENTS A MONTH.

WACO, TEXAS, - AUGUST 29, 1888.

The late E. Dwyer Gray, of the Dublin Freeman's Journal, left a fortune of nearly $450,000.

It is proposed to build a three-foot-wide cinder path between New York and New Haven for bicycles.

The richest mine in Australia and perhaps in the world is the Mount Morgan, in Queensland. It is variously estimated as worth from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000. An offer of $19,000,000 for it was refused.

Mr. Gladstone says he can hold out no hope that he will be able to take part in any political work after the settlement of the Irish question. His one aim in life is to secure Home rule for Ireland. That done, he believes his public work will be ended.

By a canal recently finished at Arques, France, by Edwin Clark, the English engineer, five or six locks are done away with, and the boats, often with loads of as much as 250 tons, are lifted fifty feet at a single operation in a few minutes and with no loss of water.

Mrs. Stanford, the wife of the rich Senator from California, has endowed another $1000 bed, making eight in all, in different charitable institutions in Washington. She has endowed about sixty-five such beds in California, and probably a hundred more in different parts of the country.

A bill in the English Parliament proposes to compel the sellers of foreign meat to announce that fact by a conspicuous placard on their shop or stall, the idea being that people are deceived into buying foreign meat for the English article, as they are into purchasing oleomargarine for butter.

The Roman Catholic priests of Lawrence, Mass., have been working hard to pay off the depositors in the Augustin Bank, whose suspension five years ago created such a sensation. During the past two years $15,000 has been paid to depositors, and it is hoped that every cent will be cleared off.

Congressman Matson, of Indiana, has declined to accept the silver service which was presented to him by the employees of the Government Printing office on the ground that it is not proper for him to accept any reward for the performance of duty imposed on him as a member of Congress, and that it would set a bad example.

An eccentric Irishman in New York has his monument in Calvary Cemetery all erected, and his lot made ready for the time when he shall be borne thither. Every few days this patriotic and thoughtful Irishman visits the cemetery and reads with pride the inscription on the base of the monument: "To Outlast the British Monarchy."

The French national debt is stated to be the largest in the world—$5,000,000,000; annual interest, $254,000,000. Thus the interest alone is nearly $60,000,000 more than the total wants of the United States government. The per capita tax of the French people is $15, perhaps the largest of any people. The President receives salary of $153,000 a year.

Among the latest Democratic gains is President William De Witt Hyde, of Bowdoin College, who addressed the Young Men's Democratic Club of Brunswick, Me., Wednesday evening in the Town Hall. Mr. Hyde is an Independent. Four years ago he did not vote for either one of the presidential candidates. This year he will vote for Cleveland and Thurman. Prof. Pease and Woodruff, of Bowdoin faculty, will also vote the Democratic national ticket.

THE DEMOCRATIC CAMPAIGN.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat has this to say under the above caption: The democratic campaign has greatly brightened during the past week, and those excited papers that were disposed to be restive because the party was not active enough, have become reconciled again and happy over the prospects.

Mr. Thurman's entrance into the campaign has called out all the latent democratic enthusiasm, and the Old Roman's reception everywhere has outshone that of the plumed chieftain of the republican cause.

Again, Mr. Cleveland's fisheries message has knocked all the wind out of an issue upon which the republicans were building bright hopes. They had fixed the fisheries question so that the president had apparently no way of escaping. He was sailing between the Charybdis of war with England and the Scylla of abandoning American rights; but, with all the dangers ahead, he made the passage safely with his able, patriotic, statesmanlike message.

While the democrats are thus gaining points, while Mr. Cleveland with his fisheries message and Mr. Thurman with his speeches are making a practical and vote-winning canvass, the republicans are helping them with their mistakes. There could be no graver error than their temporizing policy on the tariff, one minute declaring that they are going to reform the irregularities of the present tariff, the next that it is perfect and not a change can be made.

But gravest of all, as fatal as Mr. Burchard's famous utterance, is Mr. Blaine's casual remark (as the New York Tribune puts it) that "trusts are private affairs with which Mr. Cleveland has nothing to do." In the public sentiment of the country to-day, there could have been no more fatal utterance than this, and the hundreds of apologies and explanations of the republican papers will not excuse or cover it up. The republican committee imported Mr. Blaine to run the campaign for them; they have allowed him to have full swing, to determine the policy to be pursued. They have made him the mouthpiece of the party and they must not be surprised if the country holds them responsible for his utterances.

It is more than two months before the election; plenty of time for an active campaign. The first week of real canvassing opens most favorably for the democratic cause. The chances were bright before; they are greatly improved now.

Congressman Anderson, of Iowa, the Republican who voted for the Mills bill, announces that he will be an Independent candidate for re-election, and his platform, he says is his record in the Fiftieth Congress.

HE CAME PREPARED.

A Case of True Love Applied Scientifically.

"You don't know what love is, Mr. Swackhammer," protested the beautiful girl, with a smile of incredulity on her face, "the sentiment you entertain for me is only a passing fancy. When it has had its brief day and you look at it in the cold light of reason you will be surprised that you ever mistook so palpable a delusion for the genuine thing it assumes to represent."

"But hear me, Miss Garlinghouse," exclaimed the young man, calmly, yet earnestly, "am I not old enough to know my own?"

"It is not a question of age, Mr. Swackhammer," interposed Miss Garlinghouse, still smiling incredulously, "but of scientific demonstration. As you are probably aware, I have devoted myself for the last two or three years to a severe course of scientific study, and I have acquired the habit, perhaps unconsciously, of accepting nothing as true that is not demonstrable by the inexorable rules of mathematics or the soundest process of logical induction. Science has become with me the touchstone of all things asserted, claimed or proposed, and—"

"But how do you apply the rules of science to matters of the heart?" inquired the young man. "How can you subject my love to the test of a mathematical or scientific demonstration?"

"In this way, Mr. Swackhammer: The action of the passion or emotion of love upon the various sympathetic ganglia of the human organism causes certain well-defined and clearly defined phenomena. When you speak to me of love I look for the appearance of those phenomena. From a scientific point of view they are not satisfactory. The tremor in your voice is not sufficiently pronounced. Your articulation is not thick and husky. The color in your face is hardly a shade paler than its normal hue, and you have no nervous movements of the hands. Do you think a mere assertion can disprove the evidence?"

"Alvin Garlinghouse," came impetuously from the lips of the young man, as he rose to his feet, "there are facts in mental as well as physical science that are not wholly beneath your notice. Some men are gifted with a marvelous faculty of self-control, so far as external manifestations are concerned. Beneath the apparently unmoved exterior that you have subjected to a scientific test there rages a volcano of passion. Do you doubt it? I will demonstrate it to a mathematical certainty. I forswear the skepticism with which you would receive my avowal, and come prepared. Listen to the beating of my heart!"

And with a quick movement he drew from beneath his waistcoat the flexible tube of a stethoscope and placed it against her ear.

"Count the pulsations!" he continued. "They will run nearly 100 to the minute. Normal heartbeat, seventy pulsations. Note the revelation of deathless love conveyed by this respirator!" And he produced another flexible tube. "Respirations per minute, twenty-eight. Twenty-eight, Alvin—count them—twenty-eight! Normal respirations per minute, from fourteen to twenty in adults. Observe the mathematical certainty of tempestuous passion demonstrated by my temperature!" And opened his tightly closed left hand he showed her a small thermometer. "Temperature, Alvin, 112 degs! Normal temperature, about 100 degs. Fahrenheit! Have I proved my love?"

"Alvin," murmured the lovely girl, as she placed her head on his shoulder, with her lips at an accessible angle, "you have!"—Chicago Tribune.

No Use.

She's such a dainty little thing, With such a charming way, That, if she'd let me, I should stay Her precious night and day.

She is so witty and so bright, So blithe and full of life, That it would fill me with delight If she would be my wife.

She's simply perfect—nothing less— Or so at least she seems. In her I find, I must confess, The ideal of my dreams.

But ah! the pain that breaks my heart May never be assuaged. Her way and mine must lie apart, For, being ladies engaged.

—Somerville Journal.

A Suggestion.

"Greetings! How well it is preserved," said one traveling man to another as they gazed at a mummy in a museum. "It looks as if it might wake up and speak, if you could only arouse it with some familiar words."

"So it does. Suppose you try it with that story you just told me."—Merchant Traveler.

A Sure Remedy.

We heard of a farmer near Elston who sent for an advertised twenty-five cent potato bug killer. He received two little wooden mallets with instruction to catch the bug and smash him with the mallet, and if he did not kill the first lick to repeat.

The Cat That a Blind Man Can See.

"If you start out on a journey," says an old book of wisdom, "and meet a cat, you should at once turn back and postpone your journey." Yes, and take a bath and berry your clothes, if it's that kind of a cat.—Burlington.

Impatience.

Children, who have been cautioned not to tease their little brother Elmer, as he was cutting a tooth, waited expectantly a few minutes. Then Ned spoke up: "I say, auntie, has he cut it yet?"—Harper's Young People.

Looking Ahead.

Old man (en route for the races)—Pleasant ride, this, to the race course?—Young man (nervously)—Yes, but think of the long walk back!—Time.

Anchorites and Porpoises.

Anchorites are so plenty at Trebizond that they are sold for 27 cents a hundred weight for food for paupers and for fertilizing purposes, and during the first part of the season each year so many are thrown away that the whole city is pervaded with the smell of their rotteness. Porpoises are also very plentiful, about 40,000 hundred weight a year being caught, according to the British consul, which yield about half that weight of oil.—New York Sun.
